

About the Author

Janet S. Kole has practiced law since 1980, first as a commercial litigator and then as an environmental lawyer. She has been writing since she was 8 years old, and has been published in numerous publications, including Harper's Bazaar, where she had a column on women and the law, and Penthouse, where she wrote about non-legal matters. She worked for many years as a photojournalist before attending law school. She is a cum laude graduate of Bryn Mawr College, received her M.A. from New York University, and graduated magna cum laude from the James Beasley School of Law at Temple University.

Ms. Kole was the editor and co-editor of Environmental Litigation, first and second editions, published by the American Bar Association's Section of Litigation, and was co-author of Post Mortem, published by Doubleday. When she is not writing she loves to play golf and to be on the water in any kind of boat.

She has always been in private practice, most recently with Flaster\Greenberg, PC in Cherry Hill, NJ, and Philadelphia, PA. She has been a part of the leadership of the Section of Litigation of the ABA for almost thirty years. She was a founding member of the Society for Women Environmental Professionals. She loves the practice of law.
